Tech-savvy creators have already begun making their own iPhone-style holograms, most using a variation of the 3D-printer "Bubble Maker" design and nearly all using the Liquid Metal alloy. In one of the first BH photo taggers, Dropbox's folks have created a holographic Apple Watch case for your wrist, created from the material seen in the Apple Watch commercials. The case was made with Epson's dot-matrix 3D printers, and is held together by one of those signature curved backs. If you're more of an App Store fan, you can grab this 3D artwork of the "Chronos" iPhone game from Hologram 360, while Jetset Media has also created a custom iPhone 6s case from the "Gauge" game. Futlab has also taken the custom device concept and added some watch functionality to the concept, so that you can keep track of your fitness habits while looking all futuristic-like. Of course, there are plenty of geek-oriented projects that are being worked on, like Engadget's own 3D-printed Apple Watch concept from last year. If you want to jump on the "hologram" fad but don't have the necessary equipment, one of our friends at Art Asylum has put together a DIY guide to making your own. Thinkpad bluetooth mouse doesn't work - shrikant An old HP laptop was sent to me, and it has the bluetooth mouse supplied. It doesn't work - no signal. How do I get the bluetooth mouse to work? ====== ghshephard Turn it on, and be sure to "pair" it with the device you want it to use - there should be an option on the bottom of the mouse to do that.
