test if setTimeout is still running? How can I check if the following script is running or timed out? setTimeout(function () { // Some code... }, 10000); I have tried with clearTimeout and that seems to work but it clears the timeout before it is fired. A: You can't know if setTimeout is still running.
The only thing you can do is do the following: var timeout =
setTimeout(function() { // Some code... },

10000); if(!timeout ) { // Something } Otherwise you can use some other way of creating a timer, like setInterval:
setInterval(function() { // Some code... }, 10000); if(!setInterval(function() { //
Something }, 10000) ) { // Something }

Output: I want to print only those lines that contains the word "KeyGEN" or "crack" but it is not printing anything. A: Easiest way to do it is to pipe the output of locate into grep: `locate -i '.keygen.' | grep -F "^.*:.Elcomsoft Blackberry Backup Explorer v.10.02.13..$"` This assumes you have a working locate. You can also use an alternative tool like find or find. But that can be more complicate. Another way is to do a global search in all the files in the output of locate, but it would also get the filenames: `find. -type f -print0 | xargs -0 grep -w 'keygen|crack'` The same thing, but in a single command: `find. -type f -print0 | grep -w 'keygen|crack'` If you want to get only the filenames with the results, then use `-printf=%f` instead of `-print0`. Note that `-print0` doesn't handle name collisions correctly. That is, if you have two files named "file1" and "file2". The first will be considered in match, whereas the second will be ignored. You can check for this by using `-l`. If you want to be more specific about the strings you're searching for: `find. -type f -print0 | grep -wE 'keygen|crack|(10.*|4.0|9|10|10.1|10.2|10.2.13|10.02.13|10.02.14|10.02.15|10.03.1|10.3.0|10.4|11.0|11.4|11.5.1|12.0|13|13.0|13.0.1|13.0.2|14.0|14.0.1|15.0|16.0|16.0.1|17.0|17.0.1|17.1|18.0|19.0|19.0.1|19.1|19.1.1|19.1.2|19.2.0|19.2.1|19.3.0| 0cc13bf012` methods necessary for cross-compilation? I have a library that I use for some calculations that's compiled for Java 8. Now I'm required to use Java 7 for those calculations as well, so I'm wondering whether the equals and hashCode methods defined in the library must be final in Java 7. In Java 8 these methods are final, as are all methods with this name (I saw that by the classes that are generated in the Java 8 source files). However, it seems that if I don't make those methods final, Java 7 will create a cross-compilation exception. The library uses reflection to implement its own equals and hashCode methods, but I'm not sure if the underlying reflection throws an exception for these methods that don't have the final keyword in the Java 7 version. A: In general, yes, since generated equals and hashCode are implemented in terms of what they see in the class definition. The generated code which checks the hashCode and equals method of the superclass will have issues. It's not required to be final, though. Its provided on purpose for a reason. United
