St. Louis has officially banned so-called "assault weapons" and filed for bankruptcy to pay for the legal costs associated with a lawsuit from the U.S. District Court. The city filed for bankruptcy to pay for $9.3 million in legal fees and the $220,000 cost of paying for the lawsuit. The city faced a deadline to declare bankruptcy Thursday, but passed it by 13 months. The last day for the city to file was March 1st. The city's last major challenge was in 2012 when a lawsuit was filed that challenged a 1994 St. Louis Firearms Freedom Act, which allowed the city to regulate the possession of firearms in certain circumstances. The city's latest effort to protect residents comes after a May 2017 incident in which a resident fired a gun near President Donald Trump during a public event in the city. Some residents believe the gun was intentional, while others believe it was an accident. The gun ownership registry is scheduled to end on February 14th, which many of the city's residents do not support. At least one Republican state representative has also called on St. Louis to repeal the registry./* * BMKPoilocation.h * BMapKit * * Copyright 2012 Baidu Inc.
